WHEN THE NIKITA MOON ROSE

Poems by Rob Sean Wilson | Translated into Chinese by Chih-ming Wang and others

妮基塔月升起時 威當倫詩集—王智明等譯

when the nikita moon rose

poems by rob sean wilson

“For Rob-
Come home to find Asako, born in 1916,
Year of the Dragon,
graduate of Cal in 1941,
interned at Topaz,
sitting in the cold den
wearing Rob’s fur aviator hat, flaps down her ears like Snoopy.
You, the Red Baron?
No, she says,
I fly for Ananda Air.”

—Karen Tei Yamashita, author of Letters to Memory

“In these poems, Rob Sean Wilson inventories his own coming to consciousness in midcentury America. These are love poems to the world written by an expansive and optimistic lover of the world, one who is attentive to everything from popular song to baseball to geopolitical reconfigurations. They sing. They celebrate. And they unapologetically remind us that what matters is being present for it all: “If I broke your heart world it is because I love you most of all.”

—Juliana Spahr, author of This Connection of Everyone with Lungs
